Curtis WEEE / RoHS statement
January 2013

WEEE

The Directive 2002/96/EC on Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment (WEEE) was adopted by the European Council and Parliament and the Council of the European Union on January 27, 2003. The aim of the directive was to improve the collection and recycling of WEEE throughout the EU, and to reduce the level of non-recycled waste. The directive was implemented into law by many EU member states during 2005 and 2006. This document provides a general description of Curtis' approach to meeting the requirements of the WEEE legislation.

Note that the directive gave some flexibility to the member states in implementing their individual WEEE regulations, leading to the definition of varying implementation requirements by country. These requirements may involve considerations beyond those reflected in this document. This statement is not intended and shall not be interpreted or construed to be legal advice or to be legally binding on Curtis or any third party.

Commitment

Curtis is committed to a safe and healthy environment and has been working diligently to achieve compliance with WEEE legislation. Curtis will comply with WEEE legislation by:

- Designing equipment with consideration to future dismantling, recovery and recycling requirements;
- Marking products that fall within the scope of the directive with the required symbol and informing users of their obligation;
- Separating WEEE from general waste and dispose of it through the provided recycling systems;
- Reporting information as required by each member state;
- Facilitating the collection, recycling and disposal of WEEE from private households and other than private households (businesses) as defined by the applicable member state regulation;
- Providing information to treatment centers according to the requirements defined in the local regulation.

WEEE Symbol on Curtis Products

The requirement to mark equipment with the WEEE symbol (the crossed-out wheeled bin) went into effect as of August 13, 2005. As of this date, Curtis Instruments began the process of marking all products that fall within scope of this directive with the WEEE symbol, as shown below.

Obligations for buyers of Electrical and Electronic Equipment

As of 13 August 2005, in each EU member state where the WEEE directive has been implemented, disposal of EEE waste other than in accordance with the scheme is prohibited. Generally, the schemes require collection and recycling of a broad range of EEE products. Certain Curtis products fall within the scope of the directive and the implemented member state regulations. Affected Curtis products that have reached end-of-life must not be disposed as general waste, but instead, put into the collection and recycling system provided in the relevant jurisdiction

RoHS

For several years now, Curtis has been implementing a rigorous program with the aim of achieving full compliance with the Restrictions on the use of Hazardous Substances (RoHS) Directive, 2002/95/EC.

Curtis has taken all available steps to eliminate the use of the 6 restricted hazardous substances listed in the directive wherever possible. As a result of the Curtis RoHS program, many of our instrumentation product lines are now fully RoHS compliant.

However, Curtis's electronic motor speed controller products are safety-critical devices, switching very large currents and designed for use in extreme environmental conditions. For these product lines, we have successfully eliminated 5 out of the 6 restricted hazardous substances. The single remaining issue preventing full RoHS compliance is the unsuitability of the lead-free solders available to date, due to the well-documented issues such as tin whiskers, and premature failure (compared with Leaded solder) due to shock, vibration and thermal cycling.

Curtis is closely monitoring all RoHS developments globally, and in particular is following the Automotive Industry's attempts to introduce lead-free solder as a result of the End of Life Vehicle (ELV) Directive, 2003/53/EC. To date, the automotive industry has rejected all leadfree solder pastes due to a significant reduction in reliability compared to leaded soldering.

Curtis firmly believes that the operating environments, safety requirements and reliability levels required of automotive electronics are directly analogous to that of our speed controller products. As such, Curtis will not be switching to a lead-free solder process until lead-free solder pastes and techniques are available that meet the requirements of the RoHS study groups and ELV Automotive Industry bodies. That is, when all known issues, including that of tin whiskers, are satisfactorily resolved.

At this moment in time, medical devices such as powered wheelchairs and mobility scooters are exempt under EEE category 8 of the RoHS directive 2002/95/EC, and expected to remain so until 2012. This means that there is no requirement at this time for Curtis control systems used on such equipment to comply with the directive. Similarly, all Curtis motor speed controllers used on Industrial vehicle applications are also regarded as exempt under EEE category 9. Curtis will work closely with all key customers to ensure that whenever possible, we are in a position to continue the supply of products should these exemptions expire.
